Trouble on the Taro front for Sun Pharma

Minority shareholders challenge two Sun nominees for board positions

PT JYOTHI DATTA Mumbai, March 26

Fresh trouble is brewing for Sun Pharmaceutical Industries. The Indian drug-maker's plan to get two of its nominees re-elected as independent directors to the board of Taro Pharmaceutical, its Israeli subsidiary, is set to see some opposition from minority shareholders.

The voting on the re-election and other resolutions come up at Taro's extraordinary general meeting in Israel on Thursday.

In the run-up to the event, minority shareholder Blue-Mountain Capital Management had urged fellow Taro shareholders to vote for its "independent external nominees" to the board and against the existing external directors and other resolutions, involving executive and director "compensation.

Taro had called for the EGM following a lawsuit filed last November in an Israeli District Court against it by BlueMountain and IsZo Capital LP – two of Taro's largest minority shareholders. They sought to vacate resolutions voted upon at the annual general meeting last September. "These same resolutions are now being presented for ratification at the extraordinary meeting," Blue-Mountain said.

Sun did not comment on the opposition expected at Taro's EGM. According to Blue-Mountain, there were material flaws in the voting process at Taro's AGM last year. Independent proxy voting advisory firms Institutional Shareholder Services and Glass, Lewis & Co also recommend that Taro shareholders vote for BlueMountain's nominees, it said.

Sun has seen opposition from minority shareholders ever since its $464-million proposal to acquire Taro in 2007.

Later, minority shareholders again opposed Sun's efforts to mop up the remaining shares in Taro and merge the company with itself. Last February, Sun called off its plan to buy out the remaining equity in Taro, despite sweetening the offer for Taro shareholders to $39.50 a piece. Sun's initial offer was $24.50 for a share.

"That offer, when compared to the current price of around $20 a share, would have unambiguously transferred significant value from Taro's minority shareholders to its controlling shareholder Sun," said BlueMountain.
